Neil,

As discussed this morning, MTO took the opportunity to review the strategic enforcement strategy sent around on Monday. We've suggested some changes to the key messages to be more consistent with the range of penalties included in Ontario's emergency order. However more importantly MTO would suggest either deleting section 2 of the document or re-writing it as a factual summary of the enhanced enforcement powers that have been enabled in each jurisdiction since the start of the protest (federal, provincial, and municipal). The targeted surveillance and enhanced penalties for road safety violations are not being pursued in Ontario's road safety programs. As noted in the letter from DM Leblanc to DM Keenan, on February 8, these programs are road safety focused, and our enforcement and penalty strategies for those programs are based on risk to road safety.

However, MTO has been operationally supporting police at the protests and blockades upon request, and Ontario passed emergency orders to provide new tools to police in enforcing the blockade, that could be described in this section. A similar description of municipal and federal actions to enhance tools available to police would be a useful addition to the document.
